

Luther College hosts Don Boudreaux, Nov. 2

October 30, 2017

Economist and Professor Don Boudreaux will share his lecture "The Myth of Middle Class Stagnation," at 7 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 2, in Valders Hall of Science, Room 206 on the Luther College campus.

Boudreaux's lecture will focus on how American living standards have improved significantly over the last 40 years. The lecture is open to the public with no charge for admission thanks to funding provided by Luther's Birkestrand Economics and Management Chair Endowment.

Boudreaux earned a Ph.D. in economics from Auburn University and a law degree from the University of Virginia.

Boudreaux is a senior fellow with the F.A. Hayek Program for Advanced Study in Philosophy, Politics and Economics at the Mercatus Center at George Mason University. He's also a Mercatus Center Board Member, a professor of economics and former economics department chair at George Mason University.

Specializing in globalization and trade, law and economics, and antitrust economics, Boudreaux is the Martha and Nelson Getchell Chair for the Study of Free Market Capitalism at the Mercatus Center. He also serves as an adjunct scholar at the Cato Institute, Washington, D.C.

Boudreaux is the author of "The Essential Hayek," "Hypocrites and Half-Wits" and "Globalization." He's published articles in The Wall Street Journal, US News & World Report and USA Today, in addition to several scholarly journals. He is a regular economics columnist for the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review and writes the blog, Café Hayek, with economist Russell Roberts. He has lectured in the United States, Canada, Latin America and Europe, speaking on topics such as antitrust law and international trade
