Marginal Revolution

Small steps toward a much better world.

Premium Advertise here Google Search » Our Books

Tyler Cowen and Alex Tabarrok: Modern Principles of Economics

Tyler Cowen: Create Your Own Economy: The Path to Prosperity in a Disordered World

Tyler Cowen: Discover Your Inner Economist: Use Incentives to Fall in Love, Survive Your Next Meeting, and Motivate Your Dentist

Tyler Cowen: Good and Plenty : The Creative Successes of American Arts Funding

Alexander Tabarrok: Judge and Jury : American Tort Law on Trial (Independent Studies in Political Economy)

	BlogAds
« The Friendly Skies Main
Assorted links
1. Very good post on Ireland.	1-51
2. Economists working at hi-tech firms.
3. Tuataras routinely live to 100, or longer .	Day 25
4. Markets in everything: dealing with your health insurance paperwork.
5. A dispute over Peter Diamond's district .
6. The world's most powerful economist.
7. Via Ireland, a good argument for a King .
8. Chalmers Johnson has passed away.
9. David Nolan, founder of the Libertarian Party, has passed away ; more here . Posted by Tyler Cowen on November 23, 2010 at 11:19 AM in Web/Tech Permalink	Warning: Gruesome Video Footage
Comments
Re: Economists working at high tech firms.
I totally agree on the need for more economists to work at high tech but really any firm.
As a lawyer, I have recommended many clients to engage an economist, not in litigation, but in restructuring how they do or don't do things, how they should react to a competitive threat, or how	We Recommend they should procure, how they should

When you start mentioning some of the more detailed and non-obvious things-- bid, etc.

Mark Goldman: City on the Edge: Buffalo, New York, 1900 - present