Mark Calabria, former director of the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA), has joined Evolve Mortgage Services as a member of its advisory board.

Calabria is currently serving as a senior advisor for Cato Institute. He has more than 25 years of financial regulations experience.

As director of the FHFA, Calabria led the agency's response to COVID, bringing stability and support to the mortgage market, while also laying the groundwork for a removal of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac from conservatorship. Prior to FHFA, Calabria was chief economist to the Vice President at the White House.

"Mark has impressed us with his business acumen, caliber of achievements and invaluable expertise," says Paul Anselmo, founder and CEO of Evolve Mortgage Services, in a release. "The vast array of talent and knowledge Calabria brings will help accelerate our growth and expand our digital footprint as we continue to evolve our solutions to change the way loans are bought and sold in the marketplace."

"I am excited to join Evolve's advisory board," Calabria says, "Looking forward to collaborating with the team to help pioneer new emerging digital trends and create innovative technology solutions that provide not only the tools, data and document quality, but all the controls and compliance requirements needed from mortgage origination to the secondary marketing delivery process. Paul and his team are true innovators, and I know will bring much needed change to the mortgage market."
