

“If ye love wealth better than liberty, the tranquility of servitude than the animated contest of freedom, go from us in peace. We ask not your counsels or arms. Crouch down and lick the hands which feed you. May your chains sit lightly upon you, and may posterity forget that you were our countrymen!” – Samuel Adams

Daniel Hannan at the Cato Institute, on Limited Government

By Bob Ellis on October 2nd, 2010

British Minister of the European Parliament (MEP) Daniel Hannan, a true statesman of the world, spoke recently at the Cato Institute on new book “The New Road to Serfdom: A Letter of Warning to America.”

This is a British leader who understands and appreciates America and the American way of life better than many Americans—better than our own current president.

From the video description:

Daniel Hannan's new book, The New Road to Serfdom: A Letter of Warning to America, urges Americans not to take such things as federalism, the rule of law and limited government for granted. He believes the United States could find itself lurching toward European-style socialism even more quickly. He spoke at the Cato Institute September 29, 2010.

Hannan demonstrates a better understanding of the American experiment than any US politician I can think of. Can anyone imagine, for all his vaunted oratory skills, Obama making a speech of such eloquence and wisdom, and without a teleprompter. Hannan is a latter-day de Tocqueville.
