Maybe There's Hope After All

Todd Zywicki • December 2, 2010 10:10 am

While waiting in the airport yesterday morning flying back from Florida I looked over and saw a man intensely reading the Constitution (the Cato version). The text was already highlighted in several places and he was now underlining other passages. Turns out that it was new Congressman-elect Allen West of Florida. I've occasionally seen politicians when traveling but I am certain that's the first time I've seen one actually reading the Constitution.

To be fair, most politicians are lawyers who ostensibly have learned all about the constitution previously and by extension, how to crap on it in increasingly creative ways. :-D (Quote)

Is the Cato version different from the official version? (Quote)
