Outlook: Many Nuclear Options

By David Gauvey Herbert

Congress remains on recess until April 12, but think tanks still have a range of events planned this week, including Heritage Foundation panels on the START Treaty and a Center for American Progress forum on press freedom in the Middle East.

Here are events this week that we know about so far:

Today

- Vice Admiral Bernard J. McCullough III discusses "the Navy's approach to cyber security." (3 p.m., Center for Strategic International Studies, 1800 K Street, NW)

Tuesday

- A panel moderated by Kenneth G. Lieberthal, director of the John L. Thornton China Center, discusses the "increasing importance of foreign-educated Chinese returnees." (9 a.m., The Brookings Institution, 1775 Massachusetts Ave., NW)

- Two panels address President Obama's nuclear nonproliferation treaty with Russia. (10 a.m., The Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Avenue, N.E.)

- Stefan Halper, author of "The Beijing Consensus," discusses China's "rival model" of authoritarian capitalism and how the U.S. can confront it. (12 p.m., Cato Institute, 1000 Massachusetts Avenue, NW)

Wednesday

- The New America Foundation hosts a day of panels to address the question, "Has Mexico Turned a Corner?" (9 a.m., New America Foundation, 1899 L Street, NW)

Thursday

- The Center for Strategic and International Studies' Project on Nuclear Issues (PONI) begins its spring conference. (8 a.m., CSIS, 1800 K Street, NW)

- A Brookings panel discusses the European Union's evolving foreign policy apparatus and the importance of a new EU diplomatic service. (2:30 p.m., The Brookings Institution, 1775 Massachusetts Ave., NW)

- Nabil Al Khatib, executive editor of Al Arabiya, and Howard Schneider, former Jerusalem bureau chief for the Washington Post, discuss "The Role Of Independent Media In The Middle East." (10 a.m., Center for American Progress, 1333 H St., NW)

Friday

- The Project on Nuclear Issues (PONI) conference continues. (8 a.m., Center for Strategic and International Studies, 1800 K Street, NW)
