

Biden's Student Loan Forgiveness: A Timeline of Legal Challenges Facing the Plan

Ann Schmidt

November 21, 2022

President Biden's student loan debt forgiveness plan has faced a series of legal challenges, including a recent block by a federal appeals court.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, based in St. Louis, injunction on Nov. 14 extending a temporary block that was placed on the loan forgiveness plan in October.

The move was part of just one lawsuit against the plan. In total, six lawsuits have been filed against it, with two resulting in blocks.

Biden announced in August that his administration would cancel $10,000 in federal student loans per borrower, or $20,000 in student loans for Pell Grant recipients. The plan only applies to individual borrowers who make less than $125,000 or households who make less than $250,000.

More than 45 million borrowers in the U.S. have $1.6 trillion in federal student loan debt, the White House said. Since the student loan forgiveness application was released on Oct. 19, 26 million people have applied and 16 million have been approved for relief, according to White House press secretary Karine Jean-Pierre.

If Biden's plan overcomes the legal hurdles, it would eliminate about $430 billion in outstanding student debt, Reuters reported.

But regardless of what happens with the legal challenges, borrowers with private student loans won't benefit from Biden's student loan forgiveness plan.

If you have private student loans and want to lower your monthly payment, you could consider refinancing to a lower interest rate. Visit Credible to compare different student loan lenders without affecting your credit score.

TEXAS FEDERAL JUDGE BLOCKS BIDEN'S STUDENT LOAN FORGIVENESS

A timeline of events

In light of the recent injunction, here's a timeline of the legal challenges to Biden's student loan forgiveness plan.

Nov. 18 - Biden administration asks SCOTUS to lift blocks against student loan forgiveness
After the federal appeals court extended a block on the student loan forgiveness plan, the Justice Department asked the Supreme Court to reverse the decision.

The Justice Department also suggested that the high court could hear the dispute itself, bypassing the appeals court, Reuters reported.

Nov. 14 - Student loan forgiveness blocked a second time

The St. Louis-based 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals issued an injunction on Nov. 14, extending a block that prevented the Department of Education from eliminating student loan debt based on Biden's plan for relief.

The move was part of a lawsuit filed by six states – Nebraska, Missouri, Arkansas, Iowa, Kansas and South Carolina – claiming that their future tax revenue is threatened by the loan relief plan.

"We are confident in our legal authority for the student debt relief program and believe it is necessary to help borrowers most in need as they recover from the pandemic," White House press secretary Karine Jean-Pierre said in a statement to Reuters.

"The Administration will continue to fight these baseless lawsuits by Republican officials and special interests and will never stop fighting to support working and middle class Americans," Jean-Pierre added.

Nov. 11 - Dept. of Education stops accepting student loan forgiveness applications

The Department of Education stopped accepting student loan forgiveness applications on Nov. 11, the day after a federal judge in Texas blocked the plan.

The official website said that "Student Loan Debt Relief Is Blocked."

"Courts have issued orders blocking our student debt relief program," the message on StudentAid.gov said. "As a result, at this time, we are not accepting applications. We are seeking to overturn those orders."

Nov. 10 - Student loan forgiveness blocked, Biden administration appeals

On Nov. 10, U.S. District Judge Mark Pittman blocked Biden's student loan forgiveness plan, saying it is an "unconstitutional exercise of Congress's legislative power and must be vacated."

The move was part of a lawsuit filed by two college graduates – Myra Brown and Alexander Taylor – who were ineligible for Biden's loan forgiveness plan. The pair argued that the relief plan "did not follow proper rulemaking processes and was unlawful," Reuters reported.

That evening, the Biden administration filed an appeal.

"We are disappointed in the decision of the Texas court to block loan relief moving forward," Secretary of Education Miguel Cardona said in a statement. "Amidst efforts to block our debt relief program, we are not standing down. The Department of Justice has appealed today's decision on our behalf, and we will continue to keep borrowers informed about our efforts to deliver targeted relief."

If you have private student loans, you won't qualify for Biden's student debt forgiveness plan. However, you can potentially lower your monthly payment by refinancing.

JUDGE EXTENDS FEDERAL STUDENT LOAN FORGIVENESS BLOCK

Nov. 7 - Group files to have its appeal dismissed

On Nov. 7, a Wisconsin taxpayer group called the Brown County Taxpayers Association filed a motion for voluntary dismissal of its own appeal after a district court judge dismissed its lawsuit, according to Higher Ed Dive.

The association's lawsuit claimed that Biden's student loan forgiveness plan violates the Constitution and would raise taxes for its members.

Nov. 4 - SCOTUS denies request to block student loan forgiveness

Supreme Court Justice Amy Coney Barrett denied an emergency request to block Biden's student loan forgiveness plan, in a case brought by two borrowers from Indiana, Reuters reported.

The borrowers – represented by the Pacific Legal Foundation – had sued Biden, arguing that if their student loans were automatically forgiven, they would be "irreparably harmed" because their taxes would increase, according to Reuters.

Oct. 28 - Appeals court declines to block student loan forgiveness

The 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, based in Chicago, declined to block Biden's debt forgiveness plan on Oct. 28, following an emergency request by the two Indiana borrowers, according to Reuters.

Borrowers with private student loans will not be able to benefit from Biden's student debt forgiveness plan. But they may be able to lower their monthly payments by refinancing. You can visit Credible to see if refinancing is right for you.

ADVOCACY GROUPS CALL FOR STUDENT LOAN REPAYMENT PAUSE EXTENSION AS FORGIVENESS PLAN GRINDS TO A HALT

Oct. 21 - Appeals court temporarily blocks student loan forgiveness plan

The 8th Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis gave an emergency order temporarily blocking the forgiveness plan after the six states who sued Biden appealed a decision by a district judge.

Despite the temporary block, the Education Department encouraged borrowers to continue to apply for loan forgiveness.

The same day, U.S. District Judge Richard Young, in the Southern District of Indiana, dismissed the lawsuit filed by the two Indiana borrowers, Reuters reported.

Oct. 20 - Judge dismisses six states' lawsuit, SCOTUS rejects Wisconsin group's request for injunction

U.S. District Judge Henry Edward Autrey dismissed the six states' lawsuit against Biden, saying it lacked standing.

Also on Oct. 20, Supreme Court Justice Amy Coney Barrett rejected the Brown County Taxpayers Association's request for an injunction against Biden's student loan debt forgiveness plan, NPR reported.

Oct. 18 - Think tank sues Dept. of Education over student loan forgiveness plan

The Cato Institute sued the Department of Education on Oct. 18, arguing that the student loan forgiveness plan is unconstitutional and would undermine the Public Service Loan Forgiveness (PSLF) program, which allows nonprofits like the Cato Institute to attract workers, Higher Ed Dive reported.

If you have private student loans, you might qualify for a student loan refinance at a lower rate than you're currently paying. You can visit Credible to compare student loan refinancing rates from multiple private lenders at once without affecting your credit score.

Oct. 17 - Student loan forgiveness application opens

Biden's student loan forgiveness application opens, despite rising legal challenges.

Oct. 12 - Appeals court denies Wisconsin group's emergency motion for an injunction

The Brown County Taxpayers Association's emergency motion for an injunction was denied by the Chicago-based 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Oct. 12, after the group filed the motion on Oct. 11.

Oct. 10 - Two college graduates sue Dept. of Education

Myra Brown and Alexander Taylor filed their lawsuit against the Department of Education, claiming the process for creating the student loan forgiveness plan was unlawful.

Oct. 7 - Wisconsin group appeals judge's dismissal

Brown County Taxpayers Association appealed U.S. District Judge William C. Griesbach's Oct. 6 dismissal of the group's lawsuit against Biden, saying the court did not have jurisdiction.

Oct. 4 - Wisconsin group sues Biden

The Brown County Taxpayers Association filed a lawsuit against Biden for his student loan debt relief plan in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin.

Sept. 30 - Arizona attorney general sues Biden

Arizona's Attorney General Mark Brnovich filed a lawsuit against Biden on Sept. 30 claiming the student loan forgiveness plan would harm Arizona by making it harder for the state to recruit workers because the PSLF program would be undermined by the plan.

Brnovich also claimed the plan would worsen inflation and increase Arizona's borrowing costs, Higher Ed Dive reported.

Sept. 29 - Six states sue Biden

Nebraska, Missouri, Arkansas, Iowa, Kansas and South Carolina filed their lawsuit against Biden, Secretary of Education Miguel Cardona and the Department of Education, the Nebraska Examiner reported.

Sept. 27 - Indiana borrowers sue Dept. of Education

The two Indiana borrowers represented by Pacific Legal Foundation sued the Department of Education.

Aug. 24 - Biden announces student loan forgiveness plan

Biden announced his student loan debt forgiveness plan.

The president's forgiveness plan doesn't apply to private student loan borrowers. However, these borrowers may be able to lower their monthly payments by refinancing. Credible's student loan refinancing calculator can help you get an idea of different repayment options.