

Letter to the Editor: A new book suggestion

David Keranen

August 21, 2018

In response to a recent Community Voices article ("A moral case for fossil fuels," Aug. 20), what would you do if you suddenly experienced sharp pains in your chest? Would you go to an expert cardiologist, or would you listen to an acquaintance who knows a healer in Mexico that promotes ground apricot seeds as a treatment?

Consider that author Alex Epstein, BA in philosophy, has little or no training in science, is a member (or former member) of the right wings Cato Institute and Ayn Rand Institute, and supports the unnecessary Keystone pipeline. He appears to be a shill, perhaps unwittingly, for the fossil fuel industry.

For a comprehensive and expert scientific treatise on global warming and climate change, I suggest reading "The Weather Makers" by Tim Flannery.

David Keranen, Bakersfield