

Welcome to National School Choice Week 2015

By Joshua Thompson

January 26, 2015

For the fourth year in a row, PLF is celebrating National School Choice Week. You can see some of our previous celebrations of National School Choice Week here. PLF is happy to join with so many scholars, organizations, schools, teachers, students, and parents around the country to get the word out in support of school choice. School choice is the beautiful idea that parents and students have the right to choose the best education for their needs — that the government doesn't get to dictate a one-size-fits-all model of public education. School choice can take many forms, and PLF is out there defending educational freedom in courts nationwide.

This year, PLF is going to be doing some very exciting things for National School Choice Week. Check us out on Twitter and Facebook for some fun School Choice Week Activities. In addition, all week the Liberty Blog will be highlighting PLF's school choice cases, and on Wednesday, we expect to release a podcast with Andrew Coulson, director of the Cato Institute's Center for Educational Freedom.

Celebrate National School Choice Week with Pacific Legal Foundation. Let us know on Facebook why you support school choice. To get you started, here's a video of PLF employees telling you why they support school choice. Enjoy!