

The FP Twitterati 100

A who's who of the foreign-policy Twitterverse in 2012.

In a year of economic and political upheaval, with China on the rise, Europe seemingly in meltdown, and the Middle East in flames -- amid a pitched battle for the White House -- here are the 100 Twitter feeds you need to follow to make sense of it all. To make it easy, we've even collected them for you in a handy, one-stop list.

ECONOMICS

Chris Adams (@chrisadamsmks) -- Markets editor at the Financial Times.

Daniel Altman (@altmandaniel) -- Adjunct associate professor of economics at New York University's Stern School of Business and chief economist of Big Think.

Tyler Cowen (@tylercowen) -- Professor of economics at George Mason University, author, ethnic food expert, and pioneering econoblogger.

William Easterly (@bill_easterly) -- New York University economics professor and aid skeptic. Takes pride in being the 8th-most-famous person from Bowling Green, Ohio.

Fabrizio Goria (@fgoria) -- Italian financial journalist and perhaps the essential follow for breaking news on Europe's economic crisis.

Megan Greene (@economistmeg) -- Frighteningly prescient economist at Roubini Global Economics, with a focus on the eurozone crisis.

Robert Peston (@Peston) -- Business editor for the BBC.

Nouriel Roubini (@Nouriel) -- NYU professor of economics and international business; prophet of doom.

Felix Salmon (@felixsalmon) -- Eclectic finance blogger for Reuters.

Joseph Weisenthal (@TheStalwart) -- Hyperactive deputy editor at Business Insider.

Zero Hedge (@zerohedge) -- Shadowy and often hysterical, but always essential group feed on financial markets.

Tony Fratto (@TonyFratto) -- Former U.S. Treasury and White House official, now at Hamilton Place strategies.