

A Better Case for Free Trade

The Cato Institute has another solid Free Trade Bulletin (no. 43 dated January 31, 2011) that's worth examining.

The title Beyond Exports: A Better Case for Free Trade essentially explains the point of the authors, Daniel Ikenson and Scott Lincicome. To borrow some of their language, compared to the stock messages of proponents there's a more compelling case for free trade that can be made to contest the standard myths used by trade's opponents.

Read the full piece here: http://www.cato.org/pub_display.php?pub_id=12741

Daniel Ikenson is associate director of the Center for Trade Policy Studies at the Cato Institute. Scott Lincicome is an international trade attorney with the law firm of White & Case, LLP, in Washington, D.C.