The New York Times reports that the book, Obama's Wars, by longtime Washington Post reporter Bob Woodward that is scheduled for publication next week, depicts an administration completely at odds over the war in Afghanistan.

According to Woodward, the president concluded from the start that "I have two years with the public on this." He implored his advisers at one meeting, "I want an exit strategy," and he set a withdrawal timetable because, "I can't lose the whole Democratic Party."
