Constitutional Relevance in the Age of Obama featuring Robert A. Levy, Cato Institute Chairman

By goldwater

Created 11/23/2010 - 17:14

12/16/2010 12:00pm - 1:30pm

Is the Constitution irrelevant in the Age of Obama? Constitutionalists have won recent battles to protect First and Second Amendment rights, but who will win the war is still in doubt. Given President Obama's apparent criteria for judicial appointments, advocates of limited government and individual liberty have, at best, a tenuous hold on the floodgates. And with two dozen lawsuits challenging the federal health care law winding their way up to the highest court, one of the greatest challenges faced by our constitutional republic has yet to be overcome.

On Thursday, December 16, please join the Goldwater Institute for a special presentation by constitutional scholar and Cato Institute chairman, Robert A. Levy, who will discuss the constitutional implications of health care, gun control, differences in constitutional interpretation, and President Obama's criteria for judicial appointments.

This forum is of special interest to attorneys as it qualifies for 1 hour of Continuing Legal Education.
