As a scholar, Grossman has written widely on law and finance, bankruptcy law, administrative law, and the constitutional separation of powers, and is a frequent adviser to members of Congress on complex legal and policy issues, particularly concerning constitutional limitations on federal power. He has testified numerous times before the U.S. House and U.S. Senate judiciary committees.

In addition to articles in journals and professional publications, Grossman’s legal commentary has appeared in dozens of newspapers and periodicals, and he is a frequent commentator on legal issues on radio and television. A regular contributor to The Wall Street Journal, Grossman published his first WSJ opinion editorial under his new Buckeye title on December 6.

Grossman is a member of the leadership of the Federalist Society, an adjunct scholar at the Cato Institute’s Robert A. Levy Center for Constitutional Studies, and previously served as a fellow and policy analyst at the Heritage Foundation’s Edwin Meese III Center for Legal and Judicial Studies. Additionally, he clerked for Judge Edith H. Jones on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Grossman is a graduate of Dartmouth College, the University of Pennsylvania’s Fels Institute of Government, and the George Mason University School of Law.
