

Quote of the Week

Posted on June 3rd, 2011, by Jonathan Robe Leave a comment

Honors go to Neal McCluskey:

What an enigma American higher education is! It produces simultaneously far too many graduates and far too few.

I suppose if we all thought long and hard (or even short and easy for that matter) on higher ed, we could come up with a bunch more enigmas engulfing the Ivory Towers. But it's Friday and I really don't feel like working a whole lot more this week. I have more important things to do, like reading the Code of Federal Regulations.

Runner-up honors for quote of the week go to Dave Zirin:

Now more than ever, the NCAA is the disease: a gutter economy so lacking in moral direction they can provide the television show South Park's avatar of amorality Eric Cartman the ethical high ground.
