

REAL CLEAR WORLD

May 15, 2012

Time for U.S. to Set South Korea Free

Doug Bandow, The National Interest

AP Photo

For more than six decades, North Korea has threatened the Republic of Korea. In response, the United States fought one full-scale war and even today maintains soldiers on station. Yet Washington restricts Seoul's right to construct missiles for its own defense. The United States should set South Korea free.