

REAL CLEAR WORLD

March 21, 2012

Farce at South Korean Nuclear-Terror Talks

John Bolton, New York Post

AP Photo

Ironically, as the Seoul summit opens, North Korea will be preparing to launch a ballistic missile next month, blatantly flouting repeated UN Security Council resolutions and its own prior commitments, particularly a recent deal with the United States made public on Feb. 29.

Read Full Article >>

TAGGED: North Korea, South Korea

RECOMMENDED ARTICLES

March 18, 2012

South Korea's Iran

Byong-Chul Lee, Project Syndicate

The United States is now wrestling with the nuclear fears of two of its close allies, Israel and South Korea. Israel's alarm at the prospect of Iran acquiring a nuclear weapon is existential in nature. The same is true... more >>

---

March 19, 2012

More North Korean Brinksmanship

Korea Times

North Korea's plan to launch a satellite next month is in total disregard of the Feb. 29 deal with the United State to refrain from long-range missile launches. If implemented, it will lead to a violation of the U.N.... more >>

---

March 21, 2012

U.S. Can Take Back Seat on North Korea

Doug Bandow, National Interest

North Korea wants to deal. Or, more likely, North Korea wants to be paid to deal. Washington has reached another agreement with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK). The North promises to—again—halt nuclear... more >>

---

March 18, 2012

Two Steps Back on North Korea

The Economist

On February 29th North Korea's envoys agreed to a deal with the United States, under which they would observe a moratorium on nuclear testings, uranium enrichment and missile launches, and allow inspectors from the UN's... more >>

---

March 10, 2012

China's Stand on North Korea Under Fire

Shim Jae Hoon, Yale Global

---

Two months after his succession, North Korea's leader Kim Jong Un has seized the initiative by agreeing to restart denuclearization talks with the United States. The imperative for choosing to talk is clear: He... more >>

---