

Mao Yushi: China nowhere near the standard of a world power

Mao Yushi said that his articles were not removed in the past.

Liberal economist, winner of the Cato Institute's 2012 Milton Friedman Prize for Advancing Liberty, and outspoken critic of the Communist Party Mao Yushi, speaks to NTD and lets rip at the Chinese government for its lack of respect for human rights. This, says Mao, is the main reason why China is still far from being a world power, and incapable of making significant contributions to human civilisation despite being the world's second largest economy.