

Dear Jeb Bush, the immigration issue is an economic issue

When former President George W. Bush was in office, Republicans like Karl Rove and Jeb Bush tried to promote comprehensive immigration reform with solid economic data from the CATO Institute (Economic Think Tank) in an effort to sell the reform package. But now that President Obama is in office, we rarely see Republicans today tie the economic benefits to immigration. This is unfortunate because Latinos are more politically savvy today than in 2006. Hispanics know that immigrants have built entire communities and contribute to taxes and our economy. Read Jeb's recent interview with regard to the economy.
