

South Africa's ANC government: corrupt, inept and immoral

Marian L. Tupy

August 12, 2016

South Africa has never been the miracle it was portrayed to be by the world press. Even by some of the most basic measures of wellbeing: life expectancy has dropped 7% since 1994. More ashamedly though, corruption has become endemic. Combined with wastefulness and diversion of public funds, the country's economy is tanking and faith in government officials is so eroded that voters have little motive other than to vote along racial lines.

Marian L. Tupy is the editor of HumanProgress.org and a senior policy analyst at the Center for Global Liberty and Prosperity at the Cato Institute.