

David Axelrod comes out against limits on campaign finance contributions

February 20, 2013

 David Axelrod
@davidaxelrod

Campaign finance system is a mess. Limits have just created a cottage industry for lawyers who devise schemes to circumvent them. 1/3

3:57 PM - 20 Feb 13

54 RETWEETS 19 FAVORITES

 David Axelrod
@davidaxelrod

Too much money in politics. But if it's inevitable, let it flow directly to candidates and demand full disclosure, with stiff penalties. 2/3

3:57 PM - 20 Feb 13

72 RETWEETS 18 FAVORITES

 David Axelrod
@davidaxelrod

And end the SuperPac and faux SuperPac game that too often allows donors to elude detection and candidates to deny responsibility. 3/3.

3:57 PM - 20 Feb 13

69 RETWEETS 21 FAVORITES

Obama campaign strategist David Axelrod took to Twitter this morning to reveal that he thinks individuals should be allowed to donate as much as they wish to politicians, provided the donations are fully disclosed.

The surprising revelation puts Axelrod in the same camp as many conservatives and libertarians, such as Doug Bandow of the Cato Institute.

In related news, the Supreme Court announced today that it will consider the constitutionality of limits on campaign finance contributions.