

The Washington Post

Cato launches Libertarianism.org

By Allen McDuffee

The Cato Institute has launched a new project, Libertarianism.org, which the think tank intends to make the intellectual home for all things libertarian--rare books, videos of Hayek and Friedman, essays--but no policy.

Aaron Ross, the site's editor, writes:

Libertarianism is more than a set of policies about education, health care, defense, and trade. Behind those, providing their foundation, are ideas and history, the writings and actions of great men and women who have argued and fought for liberty. The mission of Libertarianism.org is to express and discuss those ideas directly