PrawfsBlawg

"Where Intellectual Honesty Has (Almost Always) Trumped Partisanship -- Albeit in a Kind of Boring Way Until Recently -- Since 2005"

« Criminalizing Urban Space: Three musings on the Sit-Lie Ordinance | Main | Institutional symbolic counter-speech »

SUNDAY, MARCH 28, 2010

Why do the Cato Institute and Randy Barnett care about federalism?

Brian's post on the constitutionality of health care legislation inspires my question, but Randy's support for federalism runs deeper than his Washington Post argument against the individual mandate in Obama's health care legislation: He also represented the appellees in Gonzales v. Raich, 545 U.S. 1 (2005). Moreover, it is not just Randy: American libertarians seem to have a fondness for federalism that strikes me as odd. The Cato Institute, for instance, has been a strong supporter of beefed-up limits on Congress' enumerated powers, filing a good amicus brief before SCOTUS defending the Fourth Circuit's position in the Comstock case that the power to enact a civil commitment statute for sexual predators must be tied to some express power of Congress and cannot be inferred from the Necessary & Proper clause alone.

I do not want to discuss the merits of any of these positions. (For the record, I think that Randy is wrong about the constitutionality of the individual mandate but that the Cato Institute is correct in their Comstock position). Instead, I am curious as to why American libertarians like federalism. This is not exactly an obvious libertarian position: If one level of government is bad, then one might think that two levels of government are twice as bad. Indeed, European libertarians, to my knowledge, have never liked federalism much. (On this point, see Rudolf Schlesinger's book on Federalism in East Central Europe, at pp 47-66).

So why do American libertarians think that federalism is consistent with their commitment to individual liberty? Why not, instead, support a strong national government that can suppress subnational trade wars and protect a robust set of national liberties? What's the payoff, in terms of individual liberty, from protecting subnational jurisdictions' exclusive jurisdiction over certain topics? In my own view, federalism bears very little relationship to libertarianism. I happen to support both normative theories, but I experience nothing but tension in my dual loyalties. (For me, federalism generally wins out). So, while I am glad that

Our Sponsor

Advertise here!
Email markel at post.harvard.edu

Recent Posts

Taxing Professional Athletes

The FBI's "special file room"

Institutional symbolic counter-speech

Why do the Cato Institute and Randy Barnett care about federalism?

Criminalizing Urban Space: Three musings on the Sit-Lie Ordinance

Outlining for Class...

On Good Writers (Present Company Excepted)

Supreme Court

E-mail Us About Prawfsblawg

Prawfs

Join Prawfs on Facebook!

Dan Markel
Dan's SSRN Page
Dan's Homepage

Ethan J. Leib
Ethan's Second Book on Deliberative Democracy in China
Ethan's First Book on Deliberative Democracy
Ethan's Homepage

Paul Horwitz
Paul's Home Page
SSRN Page

Rick Garnett
Home Page
Rick's SSRN Page

Matt Bodie
Matt's Home Page
Matt's SSRN Page

Steve Vladeck
Steve's SSRN Page
Steve's Homepage

Orly Lobel
Orly's SSRN

Supreme Court Bobbleheads at Yale

Is the Health Care Legislation Constitutional?

PowerPoint in the Classroom...

Tri-4-Gey 4 is next week!

The Two Fourteenth Amendments

Gratitude

Final Thoughts on "Ordering the City"

Who are your favorite writers (in the legal academy)?

Recent Comments

Rick Hills on Why do the Cato Institute and Randy Barnett care about federalism?

Rick Hills on Why do the Cato Institute and Randy Barnett care about federalism?

Rick Hills on Criminalizing Urban Space: Three musings on the Sit-Lie Ordinance

Rick Hills on Is the Health Care Legislation Constitutional?

Matthew Reid Krell on Prisoners' rights and public employee unions

Joseph Slater on Prisoners' rights and public employee unions

Randy and Ilya Somin and others keep churning out those pro-federalism amicus briefs, I can't help but think that they are really just undermining their own political commitments. Why do they do it?

I have three theories to explain the connection that libertarians draw between federalism and libertarianism, which I'll label the (a) "feet-voting" theory; (b) "shrink-and-drown" theory; and (c) "insincerity" theory. But, as I explain after the jump, they are neither very convincing explanations or justifications for the libertarians' pro-federalism position.

(1) Take, first, the "feet-voting" theory. The idea is familiar from the "fiscal federalism" literature that developed in the wake of Wallace Oates' revival of Tiebout's hypothesis about locational economies. (For a recent collection of essays describing this idea, see ">Bill Fischel's edited volume on the Tiebout hypothesis). The basic idea is that citizen-consumers reveal their preferences for local public goods by moving between competing subnational jurisdictions. In the context of fundamental constitutional rights, citizens can "vote with their feet" for liberty over laws that they deem oppressive. Think Mormons' trekking to Utah from Nauvoo, Illinois; Puritan pilgrims making their way to New England, Exodusters heading west to flee white supremacy, etc. Ilya Somin, among others, has pressed this argument for federalism in several articles.

I am willing to concede that foot-voting provides a a weak and indirect method of limiting governmental power. Note that it requires vigorous national protection of interstate mobility through the devices like the dormant commerce clause,Article IV, section 2, etc. Note also that the theory works best when state expropriate mobile assets and works worst when states persecute nationally unpopular groups like, say, accused sexual predators who have nowhere to flee because they are too few in number to capture a state government: The notion that foot-voting would do a lot to help out Mr. Comstock, for instance, strikes me as fanciful. Note finally that theory is a really attenuated way to protect liberties from very large states that can extract locational rents: yes, you can flee California and New York, but you'll have to leave behind family, friends, community, and so forth. It is not like moving to New Jersey when rents rise in NYC.

But put these objections aside and consider a larger difficulty with "libertarian federalism": Why support this indirect method of defending individual liberty rather than the straightforward way of using national courts to enforce a robust set of national rights? Must we really hire U-Hauls rather than attorneys to vindicate our

Page
Orly's Homepage

Rick Hills

Rick's SSRN Page
Rick's Homepage

Howard Wasserman

Howard's SSRN Page
Howard's Homepage

Jonathan Simon

Jonathan's Homepage

Guests

Austen Parrish

Kurt Lash

Sasha Natapoff

Michael Waterstone

Hadar Aviram

Evan Criddle

Paul Ohm

Richard Esenberg

Colin Miller

Lyrissa B. Lidsky

PrawfsBlawg Alumni

Robin Effron

Darren Rosenblum

Aaron Bruhl

Andrew Coan

Ian Bartrum

Caleb Mason

Fabio Arcila

Rick Hills on Prisoners' rights and public employee unions

Darleen Click on Prisoners' rights and public employee unions

Zak Kramer on Who are your favorite writers (in the legal academy)?

Lily on New Cyberbullying Case: D.C. v. R.R.

anon on Law School Hiring Thread, 2009-10, Thread Four: The Last Phase?

dave hoffman on Who are your favorite writers (in the legal academy)?

Shag from Brookline on The Two Fourteenth Amendments

Kurt Lash on The Two Fourteenth Amendments

anon-no-longer-on-the-market on Gratitude

Archives

March 2010

February 2010

January 2010

December 2009

November 2009

October 2009

September 2009

August 2009

July 2009

fundamental liberties? If, as Randy tells us, the Constitution is a charter of basic liberties, then why not spend one's litigating energies pressing for a more robust Ninth Amendment rather than trying to give states like Kansas first dibs at locking up Mr. Comstock? (Note that, to my knowledge, the Cato Institute filed no amicus brief in Kansas v. Crane, the SCOTUS decision upholding state civil commitment under the 14th Amendment's due process clause.

(2) The "shrink-and-drown" theory argues that, by distributing power among governments with fewer resources, government will be easier to control. It is easier to drown a kitten than a tiger in a bathtub, and states look more kittenish than then feds. Again, there may be something to this idea, (a theory which is heavily dependent on constraints in states' fiscal capacity induced by taxpayer mobility). But is it not counter-balanced by the greater danger a la Federalist #10 that states move faster and in a more populist direction than the feds? 'Three strikes, you're out," civil commitment for sexual predators, etc, are more likely to be enacted more quickly by the states than the gridlocked Congress supervising a bureaucracy not easily mobilized for popular vendettas. As a libertarian strategy, federalism again seems a bit attenuated.

(3) Finally, it just might be that the libertarians are insincere about federalism: While Randy and Co. find it a convenient way of limiting one level of government, they do not ultimately want to defend a federal system with robust subnational jurisdictions but rather intend to suppress the states with some robust theory of the 14th Amendment, dormant commerce clause, etc, when the time is right. They simply believe that a frontal assault on the welfare state is impossible before this Court and, therefore, are focusing their energies on the feds, saving the states for a later attack except on issues like the Second Amemndment where they think that they can pick off five votes.

I have no objection to insincere litigation for a sincere political goal. But one must be careful what one sues for: If one aggressively argues that issues like civil commitment, home-grown marijuana, crime control, family relations, and so forth, belong exclusively with state jurisdiction, then it may be tricky later to argue that the 14th Amendment places substantial limits on such "traditional state concerns.", federalism, after all, did not evaporate as an important concern of the Constitution in 1868: If courts can enforce federalism-based limits against Congress under Article I, then surely they can do against themselves under the 14th Amendment, reserving this provision for only the invasions of liberty that are most obvious affronts to the concerns of 1868. On this theory, federalism remains a background rule of construction

Peter Appel

Jeff Yates

Sarah Lawsky

Joseph Blocher

Richard Albert

John Greenman

Tim Zick

Jon Siegel

Noah Sachs

David Friedman

Kurt Lash

Greg Bowman

Marcia Zug

Amy Landers

Jody Lynee Madeira

Jay Wexler

Miriam H. Baer

Naomi Cahn

John Pfaff

Eugene Kontorovich

Kelly Anders

Marc DeGirolami

Rose Cuison Villazor

Mark Kende

Don Braman

Colin Miller

Chris Lund

Marcia McCormick

Brian Foley

Rob Vischer

Richard Esenberg

Michael Cahill

Susan Kuo

Ken Simons

Sonja West

June 2009

Categories

Article Spotlight

Blogging

Books

Civil Procedure

Constitutional thoughts

Corporate

Criminal Law

Culture

Current Affairs

Dan Markel

Daniel Solove

Dave Hoffman

Deliberation and voices

Employment and Labor Law

Erik Knutsen

Ethan Leib

Fernando Teson

Film

First Amendment

Food and Drink

Funky FSU

Gender

Getting a Job on the Law Teaching Market

Hillel Levin

Housekeeping

Howard Wasserman

Information and Technology

Intellectual Property

International Law

for the 14th Amendment, to resolve interpretative doubt in favor of state power in close cases.

In other words, the pro-federalism rhetoric of the Cato Institute in Comstock may come back to haunt them in McDonald v. City of Chicago, where they filed an amicus brief favoring incorporation of the Second Amendment. As a federalism supporter who is lets his libertarian sympathies take second place to his love of subnational democracy, I certainly hope so.

Posted by Rick Hills on March 28, 2010 at 12:17 PM in Constitutional thoughts | Permalink

TRACKBACK

TrackBack URL for this entry:
http://www.typepad.com/services/trackback/6a00d8341c6a7953e

Listed below are links to weblogs that reference Why do the Cato Institute and Randy Barnett care about federalism?:

COMMENTS

Randy Barnett offered the following considerations in response to my post above, which I post here because Randy is having some technical difficulties posting on the comments:

"[N]ote that I jointly submitted the Cato brief in Comstock that you like. And I also litigated the Ninth Amendment/Due Process Clause theory in Raich. It was the Ninth Circuit's ruling for us that propelled the Commerce Clause theory to the Supreme Court (where we continued to assert 9th/DP). When the Supreme Court declined to consider that theory, we then argued and lost the 9th Amend/DP claim on remand to the Ninth Circuit.

"Unlike some I could name, I feel free to employ the whole Constitution-- including e.g. the Privileges or Immunities Clause of the 14th Amendment -- both the parts the Court is more inclined to accept and those parts which, for now, are 'lost' but not yet repealed."

Posted by: Rick Hills | Mar 28, 2010 7:25:53 PM

Randy also posted the following over at Volokh's:

The Constitution has some protections of "federalism" in the form of enumerated federal powers. It also has some constraints on the police powers of the states such as the Thirteenth and Fourteenth amendments. I believe defenders of liberty are entitled to assert both sorts of clauses in litigation, and I do not see how invoking

Chris Lund

Chad Oldfather

Michael Risch

Verity Winship

Marc Blitz

Hadar Aviram

Noah Zatz

Melissa Hart

Steven Greenhouse

Ben Barros

David Schleicher

I. Bennett Capers

Katy Kuh

Tim Lytton

Carlton Larson

Adam Levitin

Helen Norton

Eric E. Johnson

Andy Hessick

Richard Epstein

Garry Jenkins

Amy Barrett

Jim Von der Heydt

Erik Knutsen

Scott Dodson

Adam Winkler

Rob Howse

Howard Wasserman

Wes Oliver

Tommy Crocker

Eduardo Penalver

Rob Kar

Mike O'Shea

Nadine Farid

Eric Muller

International Law
Jay Wexler
Jonathan Simon
Judicial Process
Kaimi Wenger
Law and Politics
Legal Theory
Life of Law Schools
Lipshaw
Matt Bodie
Music
Odd World
oPtion$ Book Club
Orly Lobel
Paul Horwitz
Peer-Reviewed Journals Privilege or Punish Property
Religion
Research Canons
Retributive Damages
Rick Garnett
Rick Hills
Science
Sponsored Announcements
Sports
Steve Vladeck
Syllabi Project
Tamanaha
Tax
Teaching Law
Television
Torts
Travel
Web/Tech

one should "come back to haunt" anyone when invoking the other. Unless, that is, one places one's love of subnational democracy above both liberty and the Constitution.

In response, I would just reiterate the question pressed above in my original post: Why does Randy care about federalism? Of course, it is possible consistently to urge both Article I limits on the national government and 14th Amendment limits on state governments. But, to the extent that the former are rooted in a strong normative principles about the value of subnational democracy - you know, those "values of federalism" recited by Gregory v. Ashcroft - then those normative principles will tend to cut against a broad reading of the 14th Amendment (as, indeed, they did in Gregory).

The theory of federalism urged by Randy in Raich and Comstock might not rely on any such robust normative theory: Randy might avoid all of those rhetorical tropes in favor of "labs of democracy," etc., choosing instead to slalom between the precedents and massage text and original understanding. If so, then such purely positivist defenses of federalism will do his libertarianism no harm. But, if he ventures outside of technical legal considerations to defend federalism as a normative goal, then I think that there is tension between the "values of federalism" and the values of liberty

Posted by: Rick Hills | Mar 28, 2010 8:39:56 PM

POST A COMMENT

Verify your Comment

Previewing your Comment

Posted by: |

This is only a preview. Your comment has not yet been posted.

Post Edit

Your comment could not be posted. Error type:
Your comment has been posted. Post another comment

The letters and numbers you entered did not match the image. Please try again.

As a final step before posting your comment, enter the letters and numbers you see in the image below. This prevents automated programs from posting comments.

Having trouble reading this image? View an alternate.

Michael Steven Green
Sam Kamin
Austen Parrish
Zak Kramer
James Grimmelmann
Liz Glazer
Laura Appleman
Lesley Wexler
Jonathan Simon
Ann Bartow
Mark Drumbl
Stuart Green
Ben Depoorter
William Birdthistle
Adam Gershowitz
Jonah Gelbach
Carissa Byrne Hessick
Jack Chin
Bruce Boyden
Miranda Perry Fleischer
Anthony D'Amato
Judge Sarokin
Brian Galle
Jessie Hill
Glenn Cohen
Elaine Chiu
Danielle Citron
Anders Kaye
Bill Patry
Melissa Waters
Miriam Cherry
Mike Dimino
Geoff Rapp
Alex Long

Weblogs

Workplace Law

Subscribe to this blog's feed

MARCH 2010

Sun	Mon	Tue	Wed	Th
	1	2	3	4
7	8	9	10	11
14	15	16	17	18
21	22	23	24	25
28	29	30	31

Search Site

»

Add me to your TypePad People list

Continue

Name:

Email Address:

URL:

Remember personal info?

Comments:

Preview Post

Jay Michaelson

Andrew Siegel

Deb Ahrens

Avi Bell

Alexandra Lahav

Kristi Bowman

Bill Araiza

Brian Tamanaha

Shubha Ghosh

Bobby Chesney

Michael O'Hear

Paul Secunda

Jeff Lipshaw

Russell Covey

Kimberly Kessler Ferzan

Yair Listokin

Jason Solomon

Scott Moss

Frank Pasquale

Alexandra Natapoff

Peggy McGuinness

Gowri Ramachandran

Gaia Bernstein

Joseph Slater

Nelson Tebbe

Jeremy Blumenthal

Adam Kolber

Linda Beale

Hillel Levin

Jonathan Zittrain

Ed Lee

Bill Henderson

Adil Haque

Dave Fagundes

Julian Ku

Tung Yin

Will Baude

Fernando Teson

Kristin Hickman

Kaimi Wenger

Daniel Solove

Mark Fenster

Doug Lichtman

Brooks Holland

Doug Berman

Lior Strahilevitz

Nicole Stelle Garnett

Ekow Yankah

Bernie Meyler

Ron Wright

Orin Kerr

Joelle Anne Moreno

David Zaring

Marcy Peek

Laura Appleman

Orly Lobel

Trevor Morrison

Kim Roosevelt

David Hoffman

Jennifer Collins

Christine Hurt

PrawfsBlawg Recommends

Larry Solum (Legal Theory)

CrimProf Blog

ACS Blog

Althouse

Becker-Posner Blog

Crescat Sententia

CrimLaw

Crime & Federalism

How Appealing

Instapundit.com

JD2B.com

Lawrence Lessig

Leiter Reports

ProfessorBainbridge

SCOTUSBlog

Sentencing Law and Policy

The Buck Stops Here

Volokh Conspiracy

Jack Balkin

Conglomerate

The Right Coast

The Yin Blog

Point of Law

Underneath Their Robes

Ribstein

Mirror of Justice

Mark Kleiman

Truth On the Market

Opinio Juris

Orin Kerr

Juris Novus

Jurisdynamics

TalkLeft

Workplace Prof

Above the Law

National Security

Advisors

Open University

Adjunct Law Profs

BlackProf

Brian Leiter's Law School Reports

Chicago-Kent Law Faculty Blog

Concurring Opinions

Crooked Timber

Dorf et al. on Law

Drezner

Empirical Legal Studies Blog

Feminist Law Professors

Findlaw's Writ

Harvard L. Rev. Forum

In Brief--Va. L. Rev.

Is That Legal?

LawBlog Central

LawCulture

Legal Profession Blog

Legal Scholarship Blog

Legal Workshop

Mich. L.Rev.'s FirstMPressions

Michael Froomkin

MoneyLaw

Northwestern's Colloquy

Opinio Juris

Rick Hasen's Election Law Blog

Talkleft

Tex L.R.'s See Also

The BLT

The Faculty Lounge

U.Penn L. Rev. Pennumbra

YLJ Pocket Part

Site Meter