

Wednesday, April 28, 2010

John Aloysius Farrell

Why Whites Should Worry About the Arizona Immigration Law

April 27, 2010 03:20 PM ET | John Aloysius Farrell | Permanent Link |

By John Aloysius Farrell, Thomas Jefferson Street blog

I suspect that Arizona is going to find out how stupid and unpopular its new law really is when law enforcement officials there start asking for the money they will need to perform the work of border guards, while at the same time fighting crime. Or when some big shot Republican matron from Scottsdale, with a killer tan, acts a little too haughty with a traffic cop and gets hauled off to a holding cell.

But in the meantime, as someone who is married to a naturalized American citizen (an ex-Canadian, God bless her maple-sugared heart), I find the precedent more than a little creepy. Now that one state is requiring people to carry identity papers, will others be far behind?

Aren't libertarians--the Ron Paul, CATO kind, not just the ACLUers--just a little sickened by the prospect of being pulled over, and having some jack-booted highway patrolman demand, like a Nazi in a World War II movie, to see your "Papers? Papers?"

Oh, I know. It's just to keep those Mexicans from overrunning our southern border, you say. It won't actually affect the right sort of people--the white ones.

Nonsense. Any new power, given to the State, will eventually be used by the State to limit everyone's freedom. So wake up my fellow Caucasians. The fact is, we are not producing children as fast as our darker brothers and sisters. Like the Israelis, or the Protestants in Northern Ireland, we're staring at a future of minority status.

Indeed, there are cities and states in the United States right now where, if they wanted to

(and fortunately they have more sense and patriotic honor than the yo-yos in Arizona), the people of color could require that the white folks carry identity papers, and be ready at all times to prove they are not economic refugees from Poland or Ireland or Iceland or Greece.

No papers? Off to the camps. It can't happen here, you say. Don't fool yourself. Sure it can. And the best way to make sure it doesn't is to strangle it in the cradle.

In the meantime, I hope folks in Phoenix and Tucson don't mind the fact that, when they call for help while being mugged or burglarized, the police are slow to respond--seeing as how they're tied up checking the papers of the family cleaning lady, gardener, and pool boy.

- Check out this month's best political cartoons.
- Become a political insider: Subscribe to U.S. News Weekly, our digital magazine.

Tags: Arizona | Mexico | immigration | Ron Paul | Hispanics | Border Patrol

Tools: Share | Yahoo! Buzz | Comments \(37\) |

Reader Comments

---

Read all 37 comments about this article

Farrell's article a weak pack of lies

We know Farrell would protect his own house from criminal invasion and we know he would help his own family if they were under attack. Understanding that, we also know that his article is a pack of lies intended for political and/or social gain. Perhaps he writes just to sell magazines because his profession and magazine are slowly dying. I wonder why? I shutter to think of the perversions that run through his mind or what he hopes to gain by turning on his own people and turning a blind eye to justice and the law, but hey, evil lurks among the unwashed.

Steven Sexton of AZ
Apr 28, 2010 11:50:01 AM
[\[permalink\]](#) [\[report comment\]](#)

---

Send all the illegals to whatever town Farrell lives in

The law in Arizona mirrors the federal law word for word. It's not a new law it only empowers the state to do what the Federal government refuses to do. 60% of Americans are in favor of the

TomW of WA
Apr 28, 2010 11:31:13 AM
[\[permalink\]](#) [\[report comment\]](#)