What others are saying

Sweet....

Way to go, Oklahoma! Maybe Colorado can jump on that as well. if we do, I'm on board!

And yes, we do need more nuclear weapons. I live by this philosophy....

You can have enough, but you can never have too much.

4 day school week

This would be a great opportunity for the parents. Neighborhood parents can get together and set up classes for their children on those off days, let's say two parents will take 10-15 children and teach them:

The constitution,

How businesses work,

How government fails,

How the education system fails them

The truth about their homework: mistakes in history

Teach American history: from the source not from interpretation

So how would this work? Parents will get together and decide where and who will teach, it will be rotational and the parents must keep their commitment, but there will be a backup, stay home parents.

Over lapping, parents will take two consecutive Fridays off of work, this is for overlap, Parent A and B teaches one week parents B and C the next, than C and D, Etc...

Parents that believe in individualism will get together to do this, as for the liberals, they don't have the initiative to do something like this because government isn't involved.

maybe the parents will see that they can educate more in one day compared to the four government days and pull them out.

Btw, does this mean their property taxes will go down also?

Talking Points

Bush never cared to 'cement his legacy', he wasn't concerned with other's opinions of him.

And regarding trying to pen a bill that prohibits fees for carry-on bags: we really have to put a limit on the control. This reminds me of a passage in the "Road to Serfdom", by Friedrich von Hayek, where he goes over the difference between sticking to set laws/rules, written ahead of time, that don't benefit any specific people, or writing laws/rules to each individual situation at the time they arise. Scary!

Barry's still working on improving US democracy?

Geez, you'd think a constitutional lawyer would know the US is a republic.

Sigh.

SEIU Party

I thought the Socialist and Economic Idiot's Union already had a political party called the Democratic Party. I guess even the Democrats are not Marxist enough for them. I hope they form one here in Missouri as well. It would be refreshing to see candidates actually preaching what they stand for, although I feel it will be wrapped up in workers rights BS rather than central planning and confiscation of wealth. It will also siphon off votes from Democrats so that the Bolshevik threat is that much less.

Official Militia in OK

I think it is a capital idea! Train them, let them arm and equip themselves, have them answerable to a chain of command with an appointed commander by the legislature, or Governor. The militia can be a cheap supplemental force to the National Guard. Might it set a stage for rebellion? Probably, but the founders intended the federal government should be afraid that the people will rise up, drag them into the street and hang them if they become dictatorial tyrants.

4 day week to save money

We are seeing this idea in so many places and it is completely foolish. It's pitiful that Americans tolerate it. I homeschool, so I've already reconciled that I will have to pay taxes and receive nothing in return but for everyone who actually expects a return on your taxes, you should be pissed.

Government is cutting one of the only services that virtually ALL taxpayers expect to receive in exchange for their taxes without any reimbursement. But the money they "save" will go to pay for handout programs. They aren't saving diddly, they are simply redistributing your money.

This is fundamentally wrong and illogical. Next year they will come to you asking for "just one more penny in sales tax to build new schools for Johnny and Suzy.", and once again, you will allow it. Foolish, foolish, foolish.

Enough about nuclear weapons

I know conservatives hate reagan because he dealt weapons to iran, but stop hating on Obama for doing the exact same plan as reagan for reducing nuclear weapons.

Do we really need more nuclear weapons than to blow up the world? oh yeah blow up the world 7 times that is.

I would prefer saving the money spent on nukes and getting tax cuts, but I am a liberal, where as conservatives love spending money on the government like the military.

fee for carry on bags....

While I DETEST fees for carry on bags, it is an Airline's decision to institute them.

Here is what I DO think that government has a right to do: demand truth in advertising. You cannot legitimately charge a low price for a ticket for a cross country flight and not expect people to carry anything whatsoever with them. They WILL have luggage of some type. So your ticket is not really just the price of airfare. It is airfare, terminal fees, carry-on fee, etc. It is time that "truth in advertising" caught up with airfares. It is time, when you book a ticket, that you be given an estimation of how much the flight will ACTUALLY cost. Assume one carryon for a trip of less than four days, and an additional checked back for trips greater than three days. Include all junk fees for the airports. Publish this price... along with their artificially low price.

Like internet sellers who charge $10 for an item and $100 to ship, the current state of airfares need to be "normalized" so that people can see that Spirit Air or anyone else is not playing on a level field when you look at their ticket prices.
