Maybe this time...

Maybe the bill passed by the House on Saturday night will stay within its cost projections. Of course, you have several cost projections to choose from. The Democrats' cost claims are all ridiculous lies, designed using accounting techniques that would land private businessmen in jail, just in time to save them from being drawn and quartered by stockholders. The Heritage Foundation's estimate of $2.4 to $2.6 trillion over 10 years, beginning when the House bill transitions from front-loaded tax hikes to full Daffy Duck freak-out spending in 2014, is the most logical projection of its true costs I've seen.

Even this will likely prove to be an underestimation of the true long-term costs. No other Big Government program has ever stayed within an order of magnitude of the promises made when it was signed into law. Medicare originally cost about $3 billion, when it began in 1965, and was projected to cost about $12 billion by 1990, adjusted for inflation. The actual cost in 1990 was nearly ten times that figure, $107 billion. It was up to $440 billion by 2007. The architects of the program would have been run out of town on a rail, if these future costs had been known to the voters of 1965.

The difference between promised benefits and expected revenues for Social Security and Medicare amounts to about $107 trillion dollars, which Doug Bandow of the Cato Institute points out is double the annual Gross Domestic Product of the entire world. The most strident opponent of the New Deal would never have dreamed of predicting this level of cost overrun. Name any government program that has been around for more than five years, and the odds are good it costs at least triple what its opponents originally said it would cost.

Maybe this time, a huge government program will be able to deliver its promised benefits. Anyone who has experienced the increasingly expensive, and rapidly deteriorating, services of the Post Office or Amtrak has good reason to be skeptical. No one who has dealt with Medicare can be eager to see the entire health care system shoveled into the drooling maw of such a bureaucracy. Those who support government health care because they don't like their insurance companies should ponder the wisdom of handing their insurance over to an even bigger, infinitely less responsive entity. Once the government takes over health care, it will not be interested in criticism of its performance. The last thing any consumer should ever be willing to surrender is the ability to take his business elsewhere.

Maybe this time, Congress will keep the promises that restrain its future activities, such as extending coverage to illegal aliens, or paying for abortions. Whatever form these promises take when they emerge from Senate reconciliation, the American people should realize they are utterly meaningless – they have no power to bind future politicians. Today's politicians can only pass along obligations to their successors, never discipline. The next Congress will be much more likely to pay attention to angry illegal alien groups brandishing lawsuits than disgruntled taxpayers who don't want to see the cost of national health insurance skyrocket. The same goes for abortions. Once pro-lifers have become trapped in the same inescapable government-run health system as everyone else, their concerns can be safely ignored. What will they do in protest? Threaten to withdraw from the national health care system? If they try it, they'll be holding their next prayer vigil for the unborn in a cell block. Only a foolish people trust their lives and souls to an entity defined by its ability to punish non-compliance with force.

Maybe this time, we can roll a titanic new government program across the fruited plains, without squashing the fruit. Among the most dangerous delusions of liberals and moderates is the belief they can unleash a blizzard of taxes and spending without radically altering other aspects of their lives... the belief they can blow the better part of $3 trillion taking over an industry, but everything else will stay exactly the same. They don't appreciate how quickly the economic depression from huge taxes and industrial takeovers will destroy the income stream fueling the program, requiring increasingly high taxes in a vicious cycle resembling the collapse of a star into a black hole. They underestimate the damage to the national psyche that will result from hooking the middle class into a welfare program it can never escape. They've grown to take our fantastically advanced medical science for granted, and don't realize how much less they'll be expected to settle for, when doctors and corporations flee from a nationalized health care industry, the way many doctors currently refuse to accept Medicare. I don't think enough people appreciate how far we have to fall, from the A+ health care we enjoy today, to the C- that will be good enough for government work.

Maybe this time, we'll be able to reverse course in a couple of years, when we realize government-run health care was a horrible mistake. Everyone has known Social Security and Medicare are locked on a collision course with insolvency, and will drag everything we recognize as economics and government with them when we die... and everyone knows there is no way to reform them, as every attempt has ended in political destruction. Public education is a nightmare no one can wake up from, because the Democrats and teachers' unions are ready to club them back into a coma when their eyelids flutter open. Reducing the rate of growth in the most absurd and inefficient spending programs is an epic battle, against frenzied legions of beneficiaries who are passionately uninterested in hearing about anyone else's tax rates or unemployment levels... but maybe we'll be able to reform or terminate this gigantic program, after reasoned discussion by the people's tribunes on Capitol Hill.

Maybe this time, Americans will insist their Senators kill this deranged health-care scheme before it gets signed into law... instead of taking risks on a government that has never failed to disappoint them.

Once pro-lifers have become trapped in the same inescapable government-run health system as everyone else, their concerns can be safely ignored. What will they do in protest? Threaten to withdraw from the national health care system?

Well said

This is why the DEMs are frantic to get anything passed. Once enacted, they own you

You cannot control cost by withholding payment because payment is excised from your wealth

And you will be funding illegals even if they are banned from the system, because

1. medical treatment of illegals is mandated by court
2. there is no provision for government to fund illegals
4. providers must raise charges to cover illegals

As long as there is mandated payment for national health, illegals will be paid for, and they will recover much more care than without the mandatory program, because now the hospitals have a bigger billing pool

Unless illegal job takers are removed from non-agricultural jobs and deported they will collect your benefits. I see no sign either party will remove the 20 million illegals, although the number will grow larger with national health, as hopelessly ill illegals begin their mass migration, to live with family while they get dialysis, chemo, brain surgery, etc

Since illegals are often outside the tax and licensing loop, they will do better than citizens who will find themselves legally drained of assets

This is only Round One. Seriously—with a paltry five vote margin, the Dems and their penny-ante whores in the MSM are shiing their pants. This is no mandate.

Basically, we won this. The confirmation of that will come next from the Senate. If not there, then the joint committees between the two Chambers.

It's not a done deal; we haven't yet lost.

I have serious question. I have posted it a few times but have not found anyone who has answered it. I am asking again because I am not an expert on congressional procedures.

If this cannot be repealed, and I understand repealing laws can be difficult, but if it can't be repealed can it not be made meaningless by simply passing another law that strips it of all its bite?

For instance, could another future congress that may not have enough votes to repeal, but did have enough votes to pass, for instance, laws like the following: laws to remove the enforcement powers of the IRS or remove the fines and other punishments. A law that would reopen privatization in health care. Could not another congress simply pass a quick series of laws that would, by default, make gov. run health care "wither on the vine." Isn't that what Newt tried to do with Medicare? He wasn't going to repeal it, just pass other laws to make it die it's own death.

I would like to think that's possible JellyToast, but if Britain's an indicator it won't be.

The NHS in Britain is now the largest single employer there. There's no way you could reform that system because too many people's wallets would get thinner.

I've seen it there. I've seen similar things in Chicago. There's a point of no peaceful return. Either someone burns the whole thing down and starts from scratch, or we're stuck with it.

And I wouldn't bring up Newt. He failed miserably to kill Medicare.

My prediction: The Senate will pass a version of this bill that removes the prison option and abortion funding, and hogties the public option. It will be a mess that will make the left and right unhappy, cost a LOT of money, and be much worse than today's system. Obama will sign it and claim victory.

You can take it from here.

Meremortal on November 8, 2009 at 6:19 PM

I will add also, regardless of whether this is passed or not. If it is passed and signed by this President, that will not be the end of the matter. There are too many people who are opposed to this, and once more and more people see what this ObamaCongress has been done to them, that list will grow.

The libs would love us to think and and feel that once signed into law, the matter of government run health care has been settled. No it has not. The fight will continue, just as it has with many other things.

The President of the United States Said That?

Mr. Obama, during his private pep talk to Democrats, recognized Mr. Owens election and then posed a question to the other lawmakers. According to Representative Earl Blumenauer of Oregon, who supports the health care bill, the president asked, "Does anybody think that the teabag, anti-government people are going to support them if they bring down health care? All it will do is confuse and dispirit" Democratic voters "and it will encourage the extremists."

It is necessary at this point to call for the destruction of Barack Obama’s Presidency through all appropriate electoral and public relations methods. This includes open contempt from the American people to make it clear to Congress that he is effectively a lame duck as of now, legal challenges to his agenda (such as the health care bill), and clear statements from voters that any member of Congress who supports him will be out of a job at the end of next year.

We should in fact clean all but about thirty or so Democrats out of the House of Representatives next November, with Nancy Pelosi being at the top of the list of those to be removed. We are not happy with Pat Toomey (R-PA) for driving Arlen Specter out of the Republican Party, but if Senator Specter supports Obama on either climate change or health care “reform,” we will put a Toomey for Senate bumper sticker on our car right now.

There is a saying, “Respect the office and not the person,” but it is meaningless. Members of our Armed Forces are required by the Uniform Code of Military Justice to respect the office, and to salute this individual and call him “Sir.” We are not, and we can call him what he is: a totally unqualified and, as shown by the above material, dishonest fraud. We can no more respect his office than we can respect the judicial offices held by Luzerne County judges Conahan and Ciavarella, who were just indicted on numerous felony counts for corruption. The individual who currently occupies the White House is a sick joke who surrounds himself with the equivalent of self-made sideshow freaks (Jeremiah Wright, Al Sharpton, Van Jones, and Michael Pfleger are but examples). He bows to foreign monarchs, and he makes “shout outs” before he talks about the mass murder of American soldiers by an alleged militant “Islamic” terrorist. Barack Obama is effectively Groucho Marx as Rufus Firefly in Duck Soup, except Obama is pathetic while Marx was funny. Any position of responsibility and trust is well above Barack Obama’s pay grade. The purpose of the latter discussion is to underscore our total contempt for this individual, and to encourage others to regard him with similar contempt.

The best thing for the United States is to effectively put the Presidency into suspended animation until January 2013, and we encourage our readers to help do this through blogs, letters to the editor, attendance at “tea parties,” calls to their Senators and Representatives, and so on.

Of course, such an act requires an attentive, focused and driven party acting in unison. How many of those words do you use to describe the current GOP?

I see what you're saying, however, the crap bill doesn't go into effect until 2013 if passed. To even get to that point, the Senate has to pass their version; the house and senate then have to get together and agree on 1 life sucking, liberty killing bill; then each have to vote again. I've been wrong before, but I don't think it can get to the final step before the primaries next spring, which can and should be very telling to the brainless leadership currently in office.

I do agree that once an entitlement is set in place it is hard to repeal, but again the entitlements won't go into effect before a new President is elected, so it shouldn't be too difficult to not implement that which hasn't happened.

I do disagree that we're talking to ourselves. The numbers of those who feel disenfranchised by this administration and it's minions is growing. Look how various groups have grown since the first tea party in April. Sure it seems like we're all online complaining to each other, but there are good conservative people out there running for political office, many on a local level, but several that I'm aware of running for state and federal positions. Even though he didn't quite make it, Doug Hoffman did a pretty good job coming out of nowhere basically. We've loads of time to work with those who will take that leap to take our country back. We (all of us) have to get out there and work for, campaign for, support financially those willing to come forward.

It's not over yet. I personally refuse to sit back and take this. And I don't think we're going to forget by 2010. Just my humble opinion.

Jelly Toast:

Actually, Newt is a good example of how hard it is to kill an entitlement or a department. He wanted to let the Health Care Finance Administration “die on the vine” by decentralizing through Medical Savings Accounts, etc. He was called a Granny-killer, and he wasn't even proposing Obama's Life and Death Panels (after all, asometimes they do decide you can live).

Theoretically, yes, you can repeal a law or close an agency—but it's tough. The Dept. of Education was a Carter gift to unions, but we couldn't close it. We couldn't even close the NEA for all their rank idiocy.

The one success was Welfare Reform. But that was repealed in Porkulus, giving states incentives to sign up as many people as possible again.

Better kill this monster in the Senate.

Commie Gorbachev is on CNN extoling the greatness of The One's plans to turn the U.S. into a socialist state via industry takeovers and nationalized health care. Why am I not surprised that the General Secretary of the Communist Party hearts Barry Soetoro. That's some endorsement.

Dr. Z, another wonderful post. I don't understand how people like you are able to remain clear and on track ideologically when people (certain bloggers -ahem Ed) begin to waiver. I don't see the insistence on what can be referred to as an overwhelming desire to appear reasonable in your work. There is no dithering and no self flagellation that so many authors develop as they become more widely read. I used to see this same kind of fire in the work of other bloggers but it gradually gets diluted. I hope that never happens to your work. Great job on another well articulated piece.

Best advice I've heard all day.

I recommend HA and the Doc to everyone I run across who expresses even a hint of understanding of today's issues.

“maybe this time” will never happen.

I have lost my trust in the people who have been elected “by the people” to run this country of and by the Constitution. ALL of them.

I will fight them with my voice and vote, but I feel as if I am in the minority.

I hope the country has awoken from their fantasy slumber.

It is all I have to hold on to.

thank you for the concise figures

Right now i am arguing with an idiot who claims that all of the costs will be paid for in savings from the insurance companies..

I tried to point out that since obamamination care run by the pelosi nazi party demands that 96% of all americans will be FORCED into the BORG health plan..

Since that effectivly puts 96% of all health care insurance providers out of business..

where will the supposed savings come from?

I still can't get through to this idiot.

Jelly ~ future Congresses can repeal anything they wish so long as House and Senate do so in the same language and the President signs it (or his veto is overridden). The likelihood of them doing so is rather remote lacking a public far more outraged than we have thus seen.

We currently have hundreds of bureaus and commissions which no longer have anything whatever to do, their entire purposes for existence having either become obsolete or been transferred to another agency. Yet, they are funded, provided office space and full staffs and salaries right along, because any attempt to eliminate them generates phone calls clamoring for their continuance (guess who makes those) while there are no calls against them (since most people have no idea they exist in the first place).

If we cannot cut the expenses which accomplish absolutely nothing at all, what makes you think we could repeal a new "entitlement" once enacted? Those who benefit from it – however few – will be quite vocal, and the squealing pigs get greased, or something like that. The same "Granny killer" nonsense mentioned above from the '90s. Silly, but it works. Stupid ideas get ever more popular with a government-controlled "education" system churning out stupidity at full capacity.

We need to beat this thing in the Senate, now, before it joins the Holy Herd of Liberal Sacred Cows in the federal budget.

Dr. Zero: another great post.

Mormon Doc on November 8, 2009 at 9:26 PM

Well said. I think as a writer (and like other artists and professionals) becomes more popular (and older) a couple things have a tendency to happen: (1) his or her body of work expands (and the chances for publication of an errant or weak piece increases) and (2) he or she often succumb to the temptation to appear in unfamiliar venues and with less depth of knowledge concerning underlying facts, so the writer defers more to experts who set conventional wisdom with an unstated agenda unlike the writer's own agenda.
