Chronicling the high cost of our legal system

Title IX sports enforcement

by Walter Olson on April 21, 2010

The U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) is chipping away at one of universities' few defenses by limiting the use of student surveys intended to measure interest in athletic offerings. "This reform rollback by the Obama Administration is a gift to the trial lawyers' lobby and will mean that more sports teams will be eliminated [as] at Duquesne University where 4 men's teams were recently terminated, said CSC President, Leo Kocher." Men should be prevented from doing anything that women don't want to do. That's only fair.
