More on the global warming thing

If you are wavering on the global warming "theory" you are now on the "positive side of the board." It appears a growing number of scientists, including a large number that believed human beings are responsible, have awakened and are launching a campaign challenging the theory against a torrent of name calling from the other side.

This is a scientific issue that has evolved into a political issue. Science is about finding facts and data to determine the truth. Many politicians are propagandists that believe in control in spite of the truth. If they can use global warming to control our lives, they will jump at the chance. The Pew Research Center for the People and the Press has poll data showing we Americans are backing away from allegation that warming data in the late 80's and early 90's was caused by human activity. The Center reports many Americans are moving away from the idea you and I are responsible (our own Climatologist, Anthony Watts has been a strong challenger of the global warming theory after he and a group of his peers found fault with the placement of the thermometers that produced data showing the Earth was warming).

He says many of the gauges used to manufacture the theory showed, " extreme 'heat bias'," because many of them were placed in direct sunlight. A group of scientists at the PEW Research Center for the People and the Press, has a poll showing our citizens are becoming more and more skeptical of the "theory," well. It alleges carbons produced by humans and their machines are causing temperatures to rise. The Center also says there is growing uncertainty among scientists on this issue as well.

A Pew research polls show Democrats at one point supported the theory by 91 percent. Now it's 75 percent. Independents originally believed the theory was a good one (79percent). The latest poll shows the number among this group has dropped 53 percent. Originally, 59 percent of Republicans bought into the "theory." That figure has dropped to 35 percent.

The Heartland Institute publishes the Environment and Climate News newspaper.

They say English Lord, Christopher Morton, an early believer in the global warming theory has come full circle. He is challenging Former Vice President, Al Gore to debate him on the issue (the former V.P. is ignoring the challenge). "If you don't debate, you're a coward," Morton told the former V.P..

Democrats in the House wasted little time getting a "Cap and Trade" bill together that reportedly will cost us millions in new taxes using the "global warming scare" as their reason.

The Heritage Foundation has studied projections in the bill and said if it passes, it will raise the cost of gasoline by 58 percent (meaning a raise of more than $1.25 per gallon at the pump) while the average electric bill would jump by 90percent for the average household. Foundation Energy industry scholar, Ben Lieberman said an average family of four would pay an additional $4,600 a year in taxes through 2035 if the bill passes.

Meteorology Professor, Dr. Richard Lindzen at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) has researched the issue during the past quarter century and developed a paper challenging allegations from environmentalists that dangerous increases in carbon dioxide emissions since the Industrial Revolution are causing rising global Temperatures, and the slackening of the sex drive in butterflies. He calls the statement, "meaningless, except in a propaganda war," which he said is being waged by a compliant mainstream media and a scientific community, ".that finds it easier 'to accept authority than disputing questions that are at issue!'"

The description on this comes from CATO Institute scholar, and a research professor of Environmental Studies at the University of Virginia, Dr. Patrick Michaels. He blames much of the global warming hysteria on the media, because they did not fact check information that was being distributed.

The bottom line on all this is the so-called "Cap and Trade" bill still pending in the House. Dr. Gabriel Calzada of the King Juan Carlos University in Spain has issued a warning to U.S. Cap & Trade supporters: "This same law was attempted in Spain, and now unemployment is set at 18 percent, carbon emissions are higher than ever, and fraud and misrepresentation of emission abatement programs are rampant. He said. "In Spain two jobs have been lost or never created in the regular economy for every one job created in the Green Economy."

The best quote on all comes from Lord Christopher Monckton, former Science adviser to former British Prime Minister, Margaret Thatcher. He concludes, "the highly placed conspirators who seek to ride the climate scare to world domination have reckoned without one thing, 'the folks who live in America.' You are here you will not let the truth go in the end it will be here, in the United States, that the truth will merge not in Europe, for we are no longer free it is here, in this great nation founded upon liberty, that the battle for the world's freedom will be won."

Let's hope we still have the resolve many people in the rest of the world believe is still part of our culture.
