

January 18, 2013

Good news! Tucker Carlson finally finds Obama "scary"

By Michael Gaynor

No wonder Obama was elected and reelected President.

On January 17, 2013, on The Laura Ingraham Show, Tucker Carlson told Laura that for the first time he finds President Obama "scary."

Wikipedia: "Tucker Swanson McNear Carlson (born May 16, 1969) is an American political news correspondent and libertarian conservative commentator for the Fox News Channel. He is co-founder and editor-in-chief of The Daily Caller. He is a senior fellow of the Cato Institute and formerly co-hosted CNN's Crossfire and MSNBC's Tucker."

Carlson: "I don't know what you consider conservative, but I'm not much of a liberal, at least as the word is currently defined. For instance, I'm utterly opposed to abortion, which I think is horrible and cruel. I think affirmative action is wrong. I'd like to slow immigration pretty dramatically. I hate all nanny state regulations, such as seat belt laws and smoking bans. I'm not for big government. I think the U.S. ought to hesitate before intervening abroad. I think these are conservative impulses."

THEY ARE!

And it was obvious long ago that Obama was out to fundamentally transform the United States and to replace traditional American values with the Far Left agenda.

But...it took Obama's gun control campaign for Carlson finally to realize Obama is "scary."

Why didn't Obamacare scare him?

Apparently not even Obama's violation of the religious freedom guaranteed by the First Amendment scared Carlson.

Carlson should have paid closer attention to The Daily Caller.

Carlson should talk with ACORN whistleblower Anita MonCrief to learn how the Far Left has promoted Obama to implement its agenda.

First he should watch The Daily Caller's Ginni Thomas's interview of MonCrief at <http://dailycaller.com/2012/08/26/leaders-with-ginni-thomas-anita-moncrief-acorn-whistle-blower/>.

The Daily Caller introduced the interview this way:

Leaders with Ginni Thomas: Anita Moncrief, ACORN whistle-blower 9:27 PM 08/26/2012

Anita Moncrief isn't your ordinary Republican voter.

During the 2008 election, Moncrief supported Hillary Clinton and then Barack Obama. But now, she speaks to tea party groups, calls President Obama a "socialist" and has come to call herself a "non-liberal."

She attributes her ideological shift to what she saw and was exposed to as an employee for the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, better known by its acronym, ACORN. Moncrief testified against the now defunct organization in 2008 in a lawsuit filed against it by the Pennsylvania Republican Party.

A writer, blogger, activist and mom, Moncrief is affiliated with True the Vote and has been disowned by some of her own family for her newfound beliefs. The Daily Caller's Ginni Thomas recently spoke with Moncrief about the efforts by the left to divide America along race, class and gender, why the left wants to grow government dependency and the price she has paid for changing her worldview.

Click the links below to fast-forward to each question:

Explain your transition from voting for President Obama to becoming a conservative

What have you learned about media bias and corruption?

How did the work of ACORN threaten our country?

What can ordinary citizens do right now?

How does increasing government dependency by more Americans increase the left's power?

What was the price you paid from moving from left to right?

Tell us about your background

What is your impression of Occupy Wall Street?

Who is your hero?

No wonder Obama was elected and reelected President.

Carlson should have been scared of Obama long ago.

© Michael Gaynor