Cato Institute Panel on McDonald v. Chicago		(03/01/2010)
3:47	I am liveblogging the Cato Institute Panel on McDonald v. Chicago. Tim Sandefur of PLF, Roger Pilon of Cato, Doug Kendall of CAC, and Shapiro of Cato will be presenting.
3:49	Room is filling up, Dick Heller is in attendance.
3:53	I had a great lunch with Don Kilmer, who was the attorney who argued Nordyke v. King to the 9th Circuit.
4:02	Pilon: Introduces the event
4:02	BTW, we are broadcasting on CSpan
4:04	Pilon: Discussing the 2nd Amendment, Privileges or Immunities Clause, Slaughter-House, and substantive due process.
4:04	Pilon: Substantive due process has given many conservatives on the Court sleepless nights. Allows judges to find rights nowhere among our unenumerated rights.
4:06	Pilon: Will Court, for first time since 1873 revive the Privileges or Immunities Clause? Among these freedoms are economic liberties.
4:07	Tim Sandefur is up first.
4:08	Sandefur: Talking about more abstract constitutional issues. 10 years from now, we will look back on this decision as a major case.
4:09	Sandefur: 14th amendment intended to be final word in debate over individual rights and nature of federalism. That debate was cause of civil war. End of war, leaders of victorious party wrote 14th amendment to make their model of sovereignty and individual rights part of the Constitution.
