

Wall Street Journal the: Fico does not deserve to rule next four years

SITA | 10 June 2010 13:58

The current Slovak government after the corruption scandals všakových not deserve to be re-elected. Notes in article for The Wall Street Journal analyst at the Washington Institute's Center for Global Liberty and Prosperity by Marian L. Obtuse. "Slovaks deserve better," he says.

Prime Minister Robert Fico

Author: Robert Hüttner, True

In particular, the article points out that investigation of suspected corrupt public procurement and sales allowances media led to the resignation of several ministers, the Prime Minister Robert Fico's response was to restrict press freedom.

The prime minister tried to coalition partners in the root of the agreement to distance itself from the corruption scandals blamed most of them right. "In fact legitimized theft and 'buranské behavior of Meciar and Slota invitation to the government," he writes in The Wall Street Journal.

Irish Times said cause is still not forgotten the bomb

Irish Irish Times newspaper back in its Thursday issue draws attention to the Slovak opposition allegation that the government of their actions hindered the country in a more positive economic development. "Slovakia should return to modest economic growth after the 2009 raid. But opposition parties contend that Fico's populist spending, tolerance of corruption and incompetence of government officials to better prevent the economic recovery in the country," wrote Irish Times.

Irish newspaper while not in the calculation of scandals and legal basis of the current government ignored the case in particular explosives by the Slovak police mistakenly sent the exercises with a passenger plane into the capital city of Ireland.