

Cato Institute: Rushed FISA debate a disservice to Americans

Fri, 01/04/2013 - 1:54pm | posted by Jason Pye

 Like  Be the first of your friends to like this.

In the waning days of 2012, the United States Senate pushed through renewal of FISA for another five years. As privacy advocates in the chambers sought to improve the legislation with sensible amendments to address privacy concerns, others, such as Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-CA), fear-mongered or otherwise avoided addressing tough questions about how FISA had been used to collect data on innocent and unassuming Americans.

In a new video from the Cato Institute, Julian Sanchez explains – with some video of privacy advocates in the Senate – why the debate over FISA deserves a more in-depth, serious discussion:

Rushed Debate on Federal Spying Powers Share More info

WATCH TODAY: SURVEILLANCE LAW, HURRICANE SANDY RELIEF, VOTES AT 3:30pm ET

CATO INSTITUTE