Koch foundations provide 'money behind the movement'

The liberal group Media Matters has launched a Web site that tracks the major financial backers of conservative activist groups, the "money behind the movement." Listed at the top of the site, conservativetransparency.org, are foundations controlled by the Koch family. It reports that these foundations have contributed millions of dollars to the Cato Institute and Americans for Prosperity, "as well as to other influential conservative think tanks, advocacy groups, media organizations, academic institutes and legal organizations, thus participating in every level of the policy process."

So what??? What's your point???

Does the Koch family and businesses not have the right to express their political opinion and fund them like George Soros???

And tomorrow gang we will have a thread telling us about the liberal groups and the big dollars moveon.org backed by George Soros poured into Obama's campaign and the amount of dollars he used to threaten the moderate dems into voting for the Obamacare debacle.

I am sure Phillip has that scheduled.

PS: All due respect intended okobserver with the 'sweetheart' comment. That is a term of genuine platonic affection based on the beauty of your mind and posts.
