TIME FOR ROMNEY TO REPENT

Some have argued that the reason Massachusetts's voters rejected Obamacare (through their vote for Brown) was that they already have "their healthcare". As this Cato Institute Study by Aaron Yelowitz and Michael Cannon points out, most of them already had health insurance before RomneyCare, and are now paying more for it. RomneyCare has only added about 5% more people to the insurance rolls, and insurance rates have gone up faster than the average in rest of the nation. I'm told it is political suicide for a politician to admit a prior policy mistake, but it would be sure nice to see Romney (and Brown and other supporters) admit it. How about it Romney? Just about every other leadership effort you have touched has turned to gold, but you missed with this one. Isn't it time to admit your mistake and ask for forgiveness?

1. This is but one of the reasons I'm not a big fan of Romney for president, like a bunch of other people are. Posted by: Michele on January 22, 2010 09:34 AM

2. 'Isn't it time to admit your mistake and ask for forgiveness?'

Well, I don't know if he has to go to that extreme (even tho lately that seems to be the norm...asking for forgiveness), but IMO he would be 'wise' to address the issue in a more contemporary way and explain thoroughly his thinking on the subject. It would be far better to have this a 'settled issue' from his standpoint if and when the time comes when he considers again running for POTUS (with possibly Brown as a running-mate...certainly NOT Sarah). Time for the Republicans to start dealing with details and spelling out their 'ideas' for 're-change'. :)

3. Mitt Romney and John McCain are the same low level Rinos that are no more than, a Liberal with a R before their names. They are both your typical Politicians whether, they call themselves Republicans or Democrats. You have Romney with his RomneyCare. You have McCain in favor of Cap and Trade plus, McCain was for going along with the Global Warming Scam. Forget them both for they are the same common Fetid Trash that is destroying this Nation. Sarah Palin, for now, is our best hope and choice for the future. If somehow, a new Party can be formed from the roots of the Tea Party and perhaps, be called The American Party with people like the Reagan and Sarah Palin types coming forward to offer their services then, America will have a chance to reverse the flow of destructive Sewer that is being forced down our throats. 4. Don't know who you are, Carter, but when interviewed Romney does admit the bill he eventually signed is not good. And he can go line by line and tell you the bad parts were the ones put in by the Dems.

That, of course, begs the question of why he signed it when he knew it was not good in the first place. If he vetoed, would it have been overridden by the Democratic legislature anyways is just only one question I have?

And who doesn't think we need some form of Health Care Reform? It is just that right now the majority party won't entertain anything but their wishlist.
